SPRING, 1972

1972 Summer School Program Features Distinguished Visitors

Several outstanding visiting professors will highlight the 1972 Southern Methodist University School of Law's summer session. Roger C. Henderson, Jeffrey O'Connell, Covey T. Oliver, and Eugene F. Scoles will be teaching classes to second and third year law students.

Presently an associate professor at the University of Nebraska College of Law, Roger C. Henderson will be teaching a course in Family Law. Having received his Bachelor of Business Administration degree in 1960 and his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1965 from the University of Texas, Professor Henderson earned his Master of Laws degree in 1969 from Harvard, where he was a Teaching Fellow from 1967-69. Also, he has been an associate with the Morehead, Sharp, Boyd & Tisdell law firm in Plainview, Texas.

Jeffrey O'Connell, a professor at the University of Illinois College of Law, will be conducting a new course in No-Fault Insurance. Along with Robert E. Keeton, Professor O'Connell has written a book, Basic Protection for the Traffic Victim—A Blueprint for Reforming Automobile Insurance, on the subject of no-fault insurance. He also has written Safety Last—An Indictment of the Auto Industry and The Injury Industry: and the Remedy of No-Fault Insurance. In 1951 he received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Dartmouth College and in 1954 his Doctor of Laws degree from Harvard. A member of both the Connecticut and Massachusetts Bar Associations, Professor O'Connell has been an associate with Hale & Dorr in Boston. He has also been an associate director of the Auto Claims Study at Harvard. From 1969-70 he held an appointment from the President of the United States as a member of the National Highway Safety Advisory Committee to the United States Department of Transportation.

Teaching Conflict of Laws will be Covey T. Oliver, who is the Ferdinand Wakeman Hubbell Professor of Law at the University of Pennsylvania Law School. Professor Oliver received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1933 and his Doctor of Laws degree in 1936 from the University of Texas. In 1953 and 1954 he earned his Master of Laws and his Doctor of the Science of Law degrees from Columbia, where he served as a Teacher-Fellow. While at Texas he was the Associate Editor-in-Chief of the Texas Law Review. Professor Oliver also has been a Fulbright Professor at the University of San Paulo, Brazil. In addition to his teaching, Professor Oliver has been quite active in the United States Department of State and in international affairs. He has served as the United States Ambassador to Colombia from 1964-66, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, and as the United States Coordinator of the Alliance for Progress program. Moreover, he has been the United States Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. In addition to being a consultant for the Department of State, Professor Oliver has written several books, among which is The Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States. He is also a co-author of Law and Politics in the International Community. His writing and lecturing, both while in public office and since, establish him as a leading practitioner and a respectable theorist as to modernization, reform and change in less well-developed countries, especially as to social development.

A fourth distinguished visitor will be Eugene F. Scoles, Dean of the University of Oregon School of Law. Dean Scoles, who wrote Problems and Materials on Decedents' Estates and Trusts with Edward C. Halbach, Jr., will use this textbook in teaching Wills and Trusts this summer. In 1943 and 1945 he received his Bachelor of Arts and his Doctor of Laws degrees from the University of Iowa. He also earned his Master of Laws degree from Harvard in 1949 and his Doctor of the Science of Law degree from Columbia in 1955. While at the University of Iowa, he was the Notes and Legislation Editor of the Iowa Law Review. He is a member of the Order of the Coif, the Society of Public Teachers of Law, the African Law Association, and the American Law Institute. Since 1966 he has been a reporter for the Uniform Probate Code Project.

In addition to these outstanding visiting professors, several regular faculty members of the Southern Methodist University School of Law will conduct classes during the School's summer session. Professor Scott Morris will teach Taxation of Estates, Gifts and Trusts. Also, Professors Walter W. Steele, Jr., and Harvey Wingo will teach Texas Criminal Trial Practice and Mental Conditions & Criminal Liability, respectively. Thus, the 1972 summer session will offer law students a combination of outstanding teachers and interesting subjects.

Faculty Notes

Professor Robert A. Bernstein will teach Evidence during the summer session at the University of Michigan.

Professor Alan R. Bromberg will be a visiting professor at Stanford University during the school year 1972-73.

Associate Dean George A. Pelletier and Nancy Brown Hopkins of Ft. Worth, Texas, were married on February 27, 1972. Dean Pelletier has also been appointed to the California Legal Services Board, which will advise on a $2.5 million grant awarded to the California State Office of Economic Opportunity to experiment with new forms for the delivery of legal services to the poor. On March 16 and 17 Professor Pelletier

Faculty Scholarship Committee Announces Policy Change

The Admissions and Financial Assistance Committee has adopted a new policy for the granting of scholarships. Beginning in 1973, financial assistance will be given to second and third year law students solely on the basis of need.

In light of the limited funds available for scholarships and the increased costs of a legal education, the Committee found it necessary to make a complete review of the scholarship program. Presently, financial assistance for second and third year students is based upon the individual student's academic record and financial status. In studying the School's scholarship policy, the Committee requested the Student Bar Association to conduct a referendum to determine student opinion as to how scholarships should be awarded to second and third year students. The results of the student survey were that financial need should be the only criterion for upperclass financial aid. Based on the student referendum and a favorable national trend, the Committee adopted the new policy.

Since the current first year class entered the School of Law under the old policy concerning financial assistance, the change in the scholarship policy will not be applied to students presently enrolled in the School. Instead, the new policy will become applicable in 1973, when next year's first year students begin their second year of law school.

However, the Financial Assistance Committee has decided not to change the existing policy for awarding scholarship grants and loans to students beginning their first year of law school. As in the past, first year financial aid is based on a prediction of future law school academic performance combined with some indication of need.

In explaining the change in the financial aid program, the Admissions and Financial Assistance Committee noted that the major problem faced by the Committee is that financial need is increasing among the students, while the available funds are not keeping up with the demand. The Committee also expressed its gratitude to the alumni and friends of the Southern Methodist University School of Law for their past support. With continued contributions, students will be able to pursue their legal education.

Criminal Justice Program Involves Police and Law Students

Under the direction of Professor Robert L. Bogomolny, the Southern Methodist University School of Law Criminal Justice Program encompasses three major projects involving the Dallas Police Department, law students, the Dallas County District Attorney's office, and other important agencies.

One of the programs is the Criminal Justice Studies Program. Beginning in September, 1971, the School of Law has worked in conjunction with the entire University, the Dallas Police Department, and the Law Enforcement Education Program to establish this four-year undergraduate degree program for law enforcement personnel. During the fall semester thirty-two police officers were enrolled. The courses offered in the program were primarily ones required by SMU for any undergraduate degree. The program proved quite successful; and the combination of police officers and college students in the classroom was very rewarding to all. Thus, since many advanced courses in criminal justice will be offered as the program progresses, the participating officers will get a well-rounded education with an emphasis on criminal justice studies.

In addition to working closely with the police, Professor Bogomolny has established two internship programs for law students. The Summer Internship Program is designed to stimulate student interest in a criminal law career. During the summer of 1971 eleven third year law students participated in this internship program with various criminal justice agencies throughout the United States; and twelve students are active in this year's program. The students work for such agencies as the Greater Dallas Community Relations Committee; the Dallas County District Attorney's office; the Public Defender Service in Washington, D.C.; the New York Board of Corrections; the Public Defender for the 4th Criminal District Court in Tarrant County, Texas; and the National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse. Funded by the Texas Criminal Justice Council, the internship is preceded in the spring and followed in the fall by required courses in Advanced Criminal Law. Working independently for the most part, the interns not only get actual trial experience in the criminal courts but also conduct detailed research projects.

The other legal internship program is the Criminal Internship Project, in which ten second or third year law students participate for three hours credit. Funded by the Council on Legal Education for Professional Responsibility, Inc., the project gives the students the opportunity of working with prosecuting attorneys from the Dallas County District Attorney's office. The students spend approximately six hours per week working in the criminal district courts or the appellate courts. They co-ordinate their efforts with those of the prosecuting attorneys in preparing briefs and in researching various aspects of criminal court procedure. Much of their time is spent in close observation of the court system. In addition to these activities, the students attend bi-weekly classes in Criminal Internship, during which they present reports on their experiences. They also submit weekly reports and a large paper covering their academic year's work. Thus, law students who are interested in pursuing a career in the field of criminal law can receive valuable practical experience by participating in the internship programs established by Professor Bogomolny.

spoke on franchising at a Franchising Institute sponsored by the Houston Bar Association and the State Bar of Texas. His speech was entitled "The Franchising Relationship: Contract and Fraud Remedies, Including SEC Rule 10(b)-5."

Professor Lennart V. Larson is the chairman of The Southwestern Legal Foundation's Short Course on Real Estate Law and Transactions, April 25-28. Also, he will participate in a Short Course on Labor Law, which is sponsored by The Southwestern Legal Foundation from May 29 to June 3, 1972. Professor Larson, who has been an impartial arbitrator in several hundred labor disputes since 1948, will speak on such topics as collective bargaining, union government and individual members' rights, and pension and welfare plans.

Professor Joseph W. McKnight has been elected to the Board of Directors of

The American Society for Legal History. One of the major goals of the society during the coming year is to secure federal legislation for the preservation and reorganization of state and local judicial records.

Charles J. Morris

Professor Charles J. Morris has been active in various labor law conferences. In May, 1971, he presented a paper concerning successorship problems to the Pacific Coast Labor Law Conference. At the Twenty-fourth Annual Conference on Labor sponsored by the New York University Institute of Labor Relations in July, 1971, Professor Morris presented a paper on "Labor Courts and New Perspectives." Also, he presented another paper on "The Need for New and Coherent Regulatory Mechanisms" at the Wharton School Conference in November of 1971. In January, 1972, he was a discussion leader during the Briefing Conference on the Realities of Labor Relations in the Government Service, which was sponsored by the Federal Bar Association and the Foundation of the Federal Bar Association in co-operation with the Bureau of National Affairs, Inc. He also participated in the UCLA Comparative Labor Law Conference in September, 1971. As chairman of the Short Course on Labor Law sponsored by The Southwestern Legal Foundation, May 29-June 3, 1972, Professor Morris will lecture on "Establishing Collective Agreements," "Balancing Countervailing Economic Power," "Individual Rights and the Collective Agreement," and "Discrimination in Employment."

Law School Is an "in" Thing

Along with other law schools throughout the nation, the Southern Methodist University School of Law is presently experiencing a dramatic increase in applications. As of March 1, 1972, applications have been received from 872 candidates for admission, as compared with 486 applications on the same date in 1971. If the present rate continues, a total of more than 1500 applications eventually may be received for the 260-275 spaces available in the 1972 first year class. This development, of course, makes it possible for higher standards to be applied and adhered to more closely than in the past. These standards take the form of a sliding scale based on a combination of the applicant's undergraduate average and Law School Admission Test score, with slightly more weight being given to the undergraduate average. This consideration is not in any way to be taken as an indication that other factors, such as recommendations, are insignificant in the process of admissions. Indeed, in spite of increasing temptations to computerize admission decisions, the School of Law continues to offer individual consideration of each application. In this regard, recommendations from alumni and other distinguished individuals are encouraged and appreciated and have made the difference in a number of cases.

Although there is a sudden deluge of applications, recruiting efforts have not been relaxed. This year, for the first time, the Admissions Committee, composed of Professors Harvey Wingo (Chairman), Robert L. Bogomolny, and Lennart V. Larson, has made extensive use of student recruiters; and initial results have been most encouraging. Not only has student recruiting promoted interviews with more potential applicants at virtually all of the schools visited, but also applicants have appeared to appreciate the opportunity to question law students concerning matters of student interest. Student recruiters have experienced very few problems in handling the endless variety of questions and have been outstanding representatives of the School of Law.

Placement Service Aids Students and Lawyers

Under the guidance of the Placement Director, Mrs. Lillian Blair, the Southern Methodist University School of Law's Placement Service assists students seeking employment. Law firms, corporations, and government agencies use the Service as a means of contacting potential employees. Since many students have indicated a desire to work for small law firms or in small towns, representatives of such firms are encouraged to utilize the Placement Service.

With respect to third year students and graduates of the School of Law, the Placement Service operates in two distinct ways. First, prospective employers can schedule interviews through the School. These personal interviews usually take place at the School of Law. Although most of these interviews occur during the fall, law firms and corporations do visit the campus in the spring when many students are still uncommitted. Any law firm or other agency wanting to hire third year students upon their graduation should contact Mrs. Blair to make arrangements.

The second mode of operation used by the Placement Office is the handling of telephone or correspondence requests. Prospective employers from all over the country can contact Mrs. Blair concerning any job opening they want to fill. The Placement Director will then contact qualified students or graduates. If a student is interested in the job, he can submit a resumé, which will then be forwarded to the prospective employer.

Since first and second year law students need practical experience before graduation, the Placement Office also tries to help them find employment during both the summer and the school year. Such experience is a valuable supplement to their regular classroom work. Many first year students are interested in some type of summer clerkship. Second year students can participate in the Summer Internship Program, in which a student works in a law office five days a week for twelve weeks. The employer will be expected to compensate such a student at the rate of $115 a week. In organizing the program the School of Law sends letters describing the internship to various firms, which, in turn, notify the School if they are interested in participating. Thus, not only does a law student have an opportunity to become better acquainted with the actual operation of the court system and the work of law offices, but also a lawyer who employs a student helps to prepare him for his role as a lawyer.

Continuing Legal Education

Several excellent continuing legal education programs, co-sponsored by the Southern Methodist University School of Law and the Practising Law Institute, are scheduled for the coming months. Programs currently scheduled are:

Further information on the above programs can be obtained by contacting the Continuing Legal Education Department, SMU School of Law, Dallas, Texas 75222.

Anderson Foundation Pledges Grant

The M. D. Anderson Foundation of Houston recently pledged a $25,000 grant to the Southern Methodist University School of Law. According to Dean Charles O. Galvin, the grant has been pledged over a five-year period for student scholarships, faculty research, and salaries. The grant is a renewal of a similar grant, which was made to the School by the Foundation in 1968 and expires in 1972.
